

WiCS

Women in Computer Science
Partnership Program

The Women in Computer Science (WiCS) student organization at the University of Pittsburgh aims to promote a community of inclusivity by raising awareness of the issues facing women in technical fields, providing a supportive environment for students, and offering professional development programming for women in computer science and associated fields of study.

WiCS is open to undergraduate and graduate students, as well as postdoctoral fellows and faculty.

ANNUAL EVENTS

Mentorship Dinner

This dinner provides an opportunity for WiCS members to network with business professionals. By speaking with women in the tech fields, WiCS members are inspired and able to build professional connections.

She Innovates

Co-hosted with the School of Computing and Information and the Innovation Institute, She Innovates is an all-female hackathon open to undergraduate and graduate students in the Greater Pittsburgh area. All experience levels are encouraged to attend. Additional events sponsorship opportunities are available.

Imposter Syndrome Talk

This event explores the concept of Imposter Syndrome - which is defined as a psychological pattern in which an individual doubts their accomplishments - and provides attendees with tips and tricks on how to overcome these thoughts.

BYOW/Supportive Study Sessions

Every other WiCS meeting is designated as a Bring Your Own work (BYOW) session. These sessions allow members to collaborate on both personal and academic projects - gaining critical teamwork skills and gaining new perspectives.

Information Sessions

Information Sessions are a great way to introduce members to career opportunities within your organization.
